THE NEW EVANGELIZATION AND HAVING ALL THE ANSWERS

A week ago a small group of parishioners from both faith communities and I watched Bishop Robert Barron's video Catholicism: The New Evangelization together in Coulson Hall. The Word On Fire Web site provides this description: "The Catholic Faith is not about myths or legends, symbols or literary devices. It's about an encounter so overwhelming that you want to tell the whole world. It is an encounter with Jesus Christ. Throughout history the call of Christ has sent people to the corners of the earth with a message of great joy, a message that has built civilizations, inspired cultures, and even sent some to prisons and to their graves. We have the same call - that's the New Evangelization." Early in the video, Bishop Barron mentions that some 20th century philosophers believed that, since God is a tyrant who controls people, and I'm free, there must be no God. In our discussion that followed, someone referred to the importance people place on their freedom and the misconception of many that going to church results in a loss of freedom. For example, some adults say that they no longer go to church because their parents forced them to go when they were children. They may think that not going to church makes them free, but it's quite the opposite. They are acting like children who try to manipulate their parents by threatening to hold their breath. When we become adults, we are free to make our own decisions. However, if someone decides that they are not going to do something as adults because their parents made them do it when they were children, then they are not free. They haven't grown up. If they were truly adults, they would understand that they can go to church without compromising their freedom. In fact, going to church would set them free. As it is, they are held captive by their excuses.

I realize that parents with adult children who no longer practice the faith suffer greatly, especially if they have grandchildren who are not being raised in the faith. Nevertheless, parents, I want you to know, you shouldn't second guess yourselves and feel guilty for forcing your children to go to church. You did the right thing. Think about it. If you hadn't forced them to go when they were children, would they now be going as adults? Not likely. Parents have been forcing their children to go to church since the beginning of the Church. This is nothing new. I suspect what is new is that people are compelled to assert their individualism, even if it means undermining their true freedom in Jesus Christ. In our discussion, we also talked about trying to console someone by suggesting that they pray and how they might react as if we are telling them what to do. Likewise, we might invite someone to go to the church and they react as if we are infringing on their freedom. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to share the joy of the Gospel. Even though we are making suggestions and inviting people, they mistakenly think that we are not respecting their freedom. Whatever we say, people are likely to think that we are telling them what to do.

So, what can we do? Pope Francis encourages us to accompany people and wait for them to say something to us. In our discussion, this raised the concern that we may not know how to respond when we are asked questions about the faith. This led to the suggestion that we offer adult catechism in our parish. I think this is a good idea. But I also think that we need not worry about what to say. For one thing, Jesus himself tells us that the Holy Spirit will give us the words to speak. For another thing, you can always acknowledge that you don't have the answer, and then suggest that you ask me, your parish priest, or suggest that they ask me themselves. Either way, rather than having all the answers, it's more important that you freely offer your support for the growth of their true freedom in Jesus Christ.
